

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A bank is constructed to include a bank body defining a number of storage compartments, a top cover covering the bank body, the top cover having a plurality of coin slots of different sizes respectively disposed in communication with the storage compartments of the bank body, and an electric circuit assembly installed in the top cover and adapted to detect the value and number of coins inserted into the coin slots and to display the value of individual coin inserted through the coin slots and the sum of coins received in the bank body.